Sleep is an important part of human life. Scientists have studied sleep for many years and have discovered that it helps both our bodies and minds function properly. Most adults need between seven and nine hours of sleep each night to stay healthy.

During sleep, the body repairs itself. Muscles recover from daily activities, and the immune system becomes stronger. Sleep is also important for the brain. While we are asleep, the brain processes information and stores memories. This is one reason why students are often advised to get enough sleep before an exam.

Lack of sleep can cause several problems. People who do not sleep enough may feel tired, have difficulty concentrating, and make more mistakes. Long-term sleep deprivation can increase the risk of health problems such as heart disease and obesity.

Scientists have found that modern technology can affect sleep quality. Many people use smartphones, tablets, or computers before going to bed. The blue light from these devices may reduce the production of melatonin, a hormone that helps people fall asleep.

To improve sleep quality, experts recommend creating a regular sleep schedule, avoiding caffeine late in the day, and limiting screen time before bed. These simple habits can help people sleep better and feel more energetic during the day.
